'The Capables' children's books feature superhero kids with disabilities

When TV writer/producer Danny Jordan found out his daughter, Emerson, would be born with a limb difference, he decided to put children like his daughter in the hero role to encourage all readers to be more inclusive and understanding when it comes to disability. He joins Good Day LA along with Nicole Kelly, a former Miss Iowa who also was born with a limb difference, who joined the board of his project to help make it not only fun and engaging for kids, but to also help encourage disability pride and help all kids grow their self esteem and awareness.
